The Energy Innovation Center (EIC) project is a collaborative of regional stakeholders formed to advance the sustainability industry.

EIC will capitalize on the latest technologies, training, and education, and combine the best of Pittsburgh's legendary work ethic and skilled labor, along with our emerging strengths in higher education and revolutionary technologies. U.S. Congressman Mike Doyle and PA Senator Jim Ferlo are leading the collaborative, which furthers the directives set forth by Mayor Luke Ravenstahl and is critical to the growth and economic vitality of the City of Pittsburgh.

EIC will create and build upon existing synergies of our academic institutions and business community to educate consumers, maintain an adequate and appropriately trained workforce, grow new physical space for education and training, capitalize on early stage market opportunities that result from university research and development efforts, and leverage multi-national corporate interests, specifically in the growing market sector of green business.
